

Jacek Koronacki, PhD, D.Sc. (Hab.), is Professor and Director of the Institute of Computer Science, Polish Academy of Sciences, Warsaw, Poland. He is an expert in advanced statistical analysis and machine learning. His interests include also bioinformatics and quality control. He is the author or co-author of over 60 publications, including 6 books. His recent involvement in bioinformatics is focused on gene expression and proteomic data analysis: classification and discovering informative features as well as interaction networks of features.

